Notice: Home care and home healthcare providers that are listed on SeniorMag have provided their own information and are responsible for the accuracy of that information. Listing on SeniorMag is a service paid for by the represented party. SeniorMag DOES NOT warrant the accuracy of that information or any company's ability to provide home care or home healthcare services. You should always ask for references and determine the nature of the services and the qualifications of anyone in the home care business before you hire them.

You should determine whether the home care or home healthcare service provider is properly accredited and licensed in your state and verify references for any time you hire anyone to come into your home, especially for home care or home healthcare services.

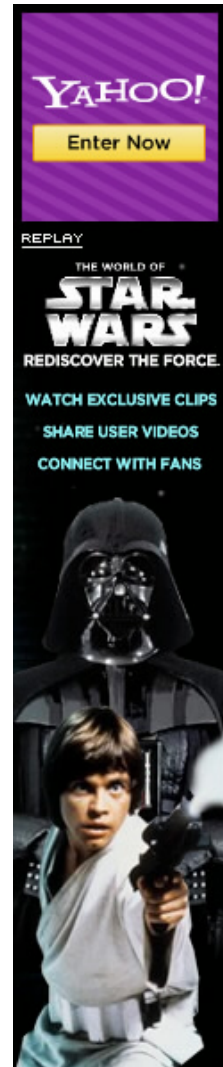

If the home care or home healthcare company is an employer, you should find out what kind of employee background checks are done on prospective caregivers. Remember, a home care caregiver is someone that is providing caregiver services in your home and for you or a family member. A background check on caregiver employee can help determine if a prospective employee has a criminal background or other problems.
